A Message from SHARON AZRIELI

We are thrilled to celebrate with you the third Azrieli Music Prizes Gala Concert.

What a remarkable adventure the Prizes have had since we fêted our 2018 Laureates. Although we have had our ups and downs, like the rest of the world, we have persevered! And great music has been made! In 2019, we were in Warsaw at the wonderful POLIN with Sinfonia Varsovia and Maestro Yoav Talmi; and in Prague at the stunning Smetana Hall with the Czech National Symphony and Maestro Steven Mercurio. We recorded our second album – New Jewish Music Vol. 2 – which garnered great reviews. Now we are back in Montreal, to appreciate the artistry, creativity and musical excellence of the 2020 Azrieli Music Prizes.

This year has undoubtedly demanded that we think and act creatively. Tonight, in your own home, on the date we promised, you will experience magnificent music composed by our three Laureates. You can watch, listen and share these performances again, thanks to our partnership with Medici TV.

What are we hearing tonight?

Israeli-born Yitzhak Yedid's Kadosh Kadosh and Cursed unites contemporary Western music and ancient Mizrahi songs across twenty-four musical scenes. Together, they showcase a unique voice shaped by a mixed Syrian and Iraqi Jewish background, filtered through the experience of this composer and improvising pianist.

Keiko Devaux contemplates the multi-faceted tapestry of our Canadian identity – a rich sonic fabric woven together by the preservation and celebration of musical recollections. Her piece, Arras, weaves Keiko's French and Japanese-Canadian heritage through a compositional process where songs from the past become abstract inspirations and wisps of memory.

Yotam Haber continues his fascination with the music of Rome's Jewish community. Estro Poetico-armonico III employs texts by Israeli poets addressing modern Israeli life sung in conjunction with, or in opposition to, Roman cantillations and liturgical texts captured in archival recordings.

I conceived of the Azrieli Music Prizes with a firm belief that music plays a positive role in shaping cultural identity and educating present and future generations. The questions, "What is Jewish music?" and "What is Canadian music?" ask composers to amplify and honour stories and traditions that resonate with us all.

How do we answer these questions? It starts with guidance from outstanding individuals on our juries and advisory council, both past and present. I am grateful for their intelligence and commitment to these Prizes.

It also involves partners like Le NEM, soloist Krisztina Szabó and Maestra Lorraine Vaillancourt. I'd like to thank them in advance for tonight's performances. I also thank the board and staff of the Azrieli Foundation for their ongoing support.

While I miss experiencing this concert with you in person, we are all listening and applauding together. I look forward to seeing you in 2022, if not before!

Until then, I wish you a beautiful and inspiring concert.

Sharon Azrieli D.Mus, C.Q.

On behalf of the board and staff of the Azrieli Foundation, welcome to the 2020 Azrieli Music Prizes Gala Concert.

Music plays such a vital role in the health of our community. When COVID-19 closed everything down in March 2020, we were quickly reminded of the impact that music has in calming, healing and balancing our world. So many of the videos and stories that people shared online involved music. The Azrieli Foundation responded to the crisis with continued funding to our grantees in music and the arts, and also by extending and increasing our funding to recipients and new programs. We are honoured that we could play a part in repairing the world through the arts.

Tonight's performance – and the new music that will be added to Jewish and Canadian repertoires – will continue to strengthen our community. Thank you for joining us tonight to celebrate these creations.

Kudos and thank you to my sister, Dr. Sharon Azrieli, who conceived of these prizes, and to Jason van Eyk, the Manager of Azrieli Music Initiatives. Together, with their juries and advisory council, they ensure that the success and impact of the Azrieli Music Prizes is reached through professionalism and creativity.

Finally, congratulations to tonight's laureates. I wish you much success with these magnificent new works.

A Word from

LORRAINE VAILLANCOURT

Le NEM begins its 32nd season in most peculiar, though not unique conditions, since the crisis that has struck the entire world has left no one unscathed. We are far from the only ones to have suffered its consequences.

When I founded Le NEM, other than the desire to perform – and perform again – the great works of the 20th and 21st centuries, to showcase the music of our time through the compositions of resolutely modern composers of all origins, my main preoccupation was to give the musicians the time needed to be able to convey this music in all its power, complexity and eloquence.

Thus, fifteen engaged and engaging musicians set to work under my direction, on January 10, 1989.

Some of them remained with us for 25 years!

It's rather ironic to think that this time that is so precious to me suddenly stood still in March of this year.

Time became a blur for most of us,
Time stolen for some, time regained for others,
Time of solitude and time for reflection,
Difficult times where perspectives vanish and uncertainty sets in...

My thanks to the Azrieli Foundation for choosing Le NEM to perform these new works, providing us the opportunity to turn to the future, and return to the stage following an eight-month hiatus, a period during which our memories and archives were our only sustenance... a rich past that should not lead us to forget the world to come!

NORMAND FORGET

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I am delighted to welcome you here, in the magnificent Salle Bourgie, and to share this concert with you. The Azrieli Foundation does incredible work promoting and producing the music of our time, and we are proud of our association with them. The prestige of the Azrieli Music Prizes, both here and abroad, continues to attract many of today's most gifted composers. These prizes promote the discovery, creation, performance and celebration of Jewish and Canadian music in all its diversity.

It is always a great joy to discover new music. Tonight will be no exception. The works of Keiko Devaux, Yotam Haber and Yitzhak Yedid, which stem from varied and richly flourishing artistic realms, represent a wonderful challenge, as they have provided the ensemble with a precious opportunity: to take the time needed to approach, absorb and perform these works.

It is impossible to ignore the times we live in. The consequences of the pandemic are numerous and varied, and it will be interesting to see whether it will have influenced the musical writing of our laureates, confirming that, as Lorraine Vaillancourt put so well, "this crisis has left no one unscathed".

In my capacity as Artistic Director, it is a great pleasure to introduce the extraordinary mezzo-soprano Krisztina Szabó, our remarkable conductor, Lorraine Vaillancourt, as well as Sharon Azrieli, who is the inspiration behind the Azrieli Music Prizes.

Music speaks to us and brings us together. May this concert be for all of us a moment of rejoicing and celebration.

Have a wonderful evening!

BY ROBERT MARKOW

KADOSH KADOSH AND CURSED

YITZHAK YEDID

Born in Jerusalem, September 9, 1971;
now living in Brisbane, Australia

The Israeli-born, Australian-based composer and pianist Yitzhak Yedid is winner of the 2020 Azrieli Prize for Jewish Music, awarded “to a composer who has written the best new work of Jewish music.” In unanimously selecting Yedid for this year’s prize, the jury described his music as “brilliant, creative, dramatic, slyly humorous and unquestionably Jewish.” Other awards include the top two prizes in Israel for classical performers and composers: The Prime Minister’s Prize for Composers (2007) and the Landau Prize for Performing Arts (2009).

The composer of over fifty works, Yedid melds the music of his ancestral Syrian and Iraqi Jewish background with Western art music. His compositions exhibit an eclectic, multicultural and highly personal style, blending jazz and Jewish cantorial music with classical European and avant-garde techniques. His skills as an improvising pianist add a further dimension to his creative work. “Yedid’s music is generally not for the faint-hearted,” writes critic Barry Davis The Jerusalem Post. “The intensity of his writing is palpable.”

Yedid undertook his musical training at the Jerusalem Academy of Music and Dance, then at the New England Conservatory in Boston and at Monash University in Melbourne, where he earned his Ph.D. in 2013. He currently lectures in composition and piano at the Queensland Conservatorium Griffith University in Brisbane.

The composer writes that “Kadosh Kadosh and Cursed was inspired by the Temple Mount in Jerusalem – that holy yet explosive place, sacred to Muslims and Jews alike. My work is a documentary of sorts, about a blessed place (Kadosh Kadosh), which is also a locus of curses, of intra-religious violence. Kadosh Kadosh and Cursed is therefore a conflicting homage to my hometown, Jerusalem. The work, in two parts, consists of twenty-four connected tableaux or musical scenes that bridge the variegated compositional approaches originating from two remote, opposing musical traditions: on the one hand from Arabic art music and Mizrahi Piyyutim (Arabic-influenced, Jewish liturgical and paraliturgical ornate songs) and on the other from European traditions, avant-garde music and improvisation.”

“Kadosh Kadosh and Cursed begins with an uproar followed by a quiet, unnerving and asymmetrical rhythmic section that grows towards a slow-building climax. This climax reflects the key attributes of the work as a whole: energetic, passionate and unyielding. The few pauses in the score are full of tension, catapulting continuous forward motion through coherent transition from chordal to heterophonic, multi-voiced sections. The section entitled “Arabic-music like” is woven through a chromatic transition. The texture travels naturally from ‘the east’ to ‘the west,’ reflecting the sounds one hears in Jerusalem, the ‘loaded and explosive place’ that inspired the work.” In this way, Kadosh Kadosh and Cursed creates “a meeting point between the ancient and the new, between historic and current events, in musical, philosophical and human terms.”

PIERRE MERCURE

Born in Montreal, February 21, 1927;
died near Avallon, France, January 29, 1966

On January 29, 1966, Canada lost one of its most promising young composers when Pierre Mercure, just 38 years old (same as Mendelssohn), died in a car crash near Avallon, between Paris and Dijon in central France. In his short career, he had risen to the front rank of contemporary Canadian composers and had shown a remarkable propensity for growth while retaining his artistic integrity.

Mercure’s professional study began at the Conservatoire in Montreal and continued with periods of study in Paris and at Tanglewood, Massachusetts. Gabriel Charpentier, Jocelyne Binet and Clermont Pépin, three other Quebec composers living in Paris at the time, were highly influential on Mercure in his search for artistic independence. With them, he assiduously pursued his growing interest in musique concrète, chance music and especially the integration of various artistic media (theater, film, dance, painting, sculpture). Back in Montreal, Mercure organized a contemporary music festival in 1961 that led the way to the founding of the Société de musique contemporaine du Québec (SMCQ) in 1966, now one of Canada’s leading purveyors of contemporary music from many countries. Among his many achievements, Mercure was the first producer of music programs on television for Radio-Canada.

Mercure was a man of broad education. At the Conservatoire in Montreal, he studied harmony and composition with Claude Champagne. In addition, he learned to play no fewer than six instruments: piano, organ, flute, cello, trumpet and bassoon. The last was Mercure’s main instrument, and for the 1947-1948 season he was engaged by Wilfrid Pelletier to play with the Montreal Symphony. He remained in the orchestra until 1952, though the 1949-50 season was spent in Paris, studying first with Nadia Boulanger (composition) and later with Arthur Hoérée (orchestration) and Jean Fournet (conducting).

Mercure’s Cantate pour une joie (1955) for soprano, choir and orchestra has been over the years one of his most frequently performed works. The Montreal Symphony, Calgary Philharmonic and the National Arts Centre Orchestra, among others, have performed it. Alexander Brott led a performance of the work in the presence of Queen Elizabeth II at the Olympics in Montreal in 1976. In 2015, Boris Brott imaginatively paired Cantate pour une joie with Beethoven’s Ninth Symphony in a concert by the McGill Chamber Orchestra, and just last year it was performed by the Montreal Philharmonic Orchestra of Musicians. One of the four component parts of the cantata is Dissidence, three short songs set to poems by Gabriel Charpentier in 1955 when the composer was just 28. Charpentier (b. 1925) wore several other hats besides that of poet. He was also a prominent composer, a theater producer, and worked alongside Mercure as coordinator and consultant for music programs at Radio-Canada. Mercure’s settings of Charpentier’s songs appropriately capture the tone of each, respectively assertive and commanding, soothing and comforting, exuberant and joyful.

In reflecting on his arrangement of Dissidence for Le NEM, which receives its world première this evening, composer Jonathan Monro said, “I set out to honour Mercure’s vocal and instrumental intentions while creating even more specific, intimate colours that I know this outstanding ensemble can produce. From the controlled fury of Les lions jaune, to the loneliness of Psaume and the ecstasy of Le cri de joie, each song is a personal journey; and it is my hope that every detail of my orchestrations feels just as personal.”

ARRAS

KEIKO DEVAUX

Born in Castlegar, British Columbia, May 23, 1982; now living in Montreal

Originally from British Columbia, where she was born to a Japanese-Canadian mother and a French father, Keiko Devaux is currently based in Montreal, where she is pursuing her doctorate at the Université de Montréal under the supervision of Ana Sokolović and Pierre Michaud. She has also studied with composer Salvatore Sciarrino at the Accademia Musicale Chigiana in Siena, Italy (2017-2019). From 2016 to 2018, Devaux was composer in residence with Montreal's Nouvel Ensemble Moderne, and from 2020 to 2022 she will be artist in residence with the National Arts Centre Orchestra in Ottawa as part of the Carrefour composer program. Her numerous prizes and awards include the Jan V.

Matejcek Prize for New Classical Music (2019) and twice the OUM composition prize (2016 and 2018.) This year, she won the inaugural Azrieli Commission for Canadian Music. In making its decision, the Azrieli Music Prizes Canadian jury found her creative output to be “interesting, authentic and in a whole different category. Her compositions are mysterious, compelling and beautiful. Her proposal [for Arras] exhibits a clever and original inquiry into what it means to be Canadian that is both honest and, in a way, hard hitting.”

In Arras (meaning a richly woven tapestry), Devaux distills various elements representing both of her families' musical and sonic environments through her personal compositional processes. The result is what she describes as “a kaleidoscope of influences over generations, cultures and musical genres within my, and my families', sonic histories.” She draws inspiration from a range of material representing the professions of both sides of her family tree (the sound of wind through fields symbolizing agriculture, and that of a mechanical loom apropos of weaving), the natural environments in which they lived (including patterns of animal behaviours such as those of starlings and fireflies), as well as the musical traditions both religious (plainsong and Buddhist chant) and vernacular (chanson française and Japanese-American popular music) through which these families expressed their identities.

To create Arras, Devaux wove together two different kinds of dialogue into a rich sonic tapestry. The first is “a dialogue among the various strands of my cultural heritage.” Here, the composer breaks down and distills elements of these strands to find unexpected commonalities between them, interweaving shared melodic fragments and harmonic identities. The second kind of dialogue is between “influences and nostalgia of my past with my own contemporary voice. This is where the actual re-composition takes place as I reconstruct these fragments in my own way. The principal aspect of my compositional method is to interact with written material through various distortions – stretching, condensing, layering, looping, cutting, transposing and interpolating the material – without losing an emotional connection to it.”

YOTAM HABER

Born in Leiden, Netherlands October 27, 1976;
now living in Kansas City, Missouri

Yotam Haber was born in the Netherlands and grew up in Israel, Nigeria and Milwaukee. His teachers have included Eugene O'Brian, Claude Baker, Steven Stucky and Roberto Sierra at Indiana University and Cornell University. His eclectic catalogue of works includes I AM for chorus and string quartet, Death in Venice for solo trumpet and Knife in the Water for bass clarinet, percussion and electronics. Upcoming projects include two works for chamber ensemble, They Say You Are My Disaster and Bloodsnow. Haber is Associate Professor of Composition at the University of Missouri Kansas City Conservatory of Music and Dance.

From 2010-2014, Haber served as Artistic Director of MATA, the non-profit organization dedicated to commissioning and presenting new works by young composers from around the world. He now holds the title of Artistic Director Emeritus of that organization. Haber's many prizes include a 2017 Koussevitzky Commission, a 2013 Fromm Music Foundation commission, the 2007 Rome Prize and a 2005 John Simon Guggenheim Memorial Foundation Fellowship. Most recently, Haber is the recipient the 2020 Azrieli Jewish Commission.

In awarding the commission, the jury declared Haber's music to be "fascinating, beautiful, clever and moving. The application of his craft and skill to his compositions demonstrates that he has all the makings of a great composer."

The work Haber composed for the Azrieli Foundation, a song cycle for mezzo and chamber orchestra titled Estro Poetico-armonico III, is third in a series that he began in 2012. For that first work, he used the fifty Psalm settings by the Baroque composer Benedetto Marcello, who transcribed and arranged what he heard in Venetian synagogues and "passed it through yet one more filter, one more "broken telephone game," as Haber describes it. "Visualize an oil painting left out in the rain before it has had a chance to dry, colors bleeding. I have turned this image into its musical counterpart." This first work in the series was premiered at the MATA Festival in Brooklyn (New York) in 2012. Three years later, Estro Poetico-armonico II for voice and five instruments was presented at the New York Philharmonic's Contact! Festival and at the Venice Biennale. Music aficionados will note the similarity in title to Vivaldi's Estro armonico, a magnificent set of twelve concertos whose title might be translated as something like "harmonic whim" or "musical fancy." It is worth noting that Haber has also, in a similar vein, borrowed the concept of another famous Baroque composer's masterpiece, Handel's Water Music, for an interactive work written in 2017 for the Louisiana Philharmonic, to be performed from boats and barges along the waterways of New Orleans.

In Estro Poetico-armonico III, Haber also continues to explore the music of Rome's Jewish community as discovered through the archival recordings of ethnomusicologist Leo Levi. He employs these recordings of traditional cantillation and liturgical texts in conjunction with – or in opposition to – texts by four modern Israeli poets (Ory Bernstein, Eli Eliahu, Israel Bar Kohav and Aharon Shabtai) that reflect upon aspects of modern Israeli life while also grappling with its history. As in his two previous Estro Poetico-armonico compositions, Haber's new work continues Marcello's 'broken telephone game' of hearing and re-hearing, remembering and misremembering, informing and misinforming. As a composer of Israeli background, Haber has spent years thinking about how he should look back at his past while looking forward at his future. Working in the time of pandemic has made him look deeply inwards, working in a way he has not done for as long as he can remember.

About the Leo Levi recordings that Haber chose for each movement*:

I. Tzur mishelo achalnu ("Rock of Sustenance") is sung by Angelina Rocca Meghnagi, Rome, 1956, one of the very few women that appear in Levi's recordings. This melody is probably derived from a popular style of the 18th century.

II. Ahot Ktannah is sung by Dario Israel, Trieste, 1956. A poem by Avraham ben Yitzhak Hazan Gerondi (13th century) for the evening of Rosh Hashanah in the Sephardic tradition of Trieste. The text, based on the Song of Songs, refers to Israel like a "little sister" (Ahot Ktannah), and calls for the liberation of the Jewish people from the suffering of years past.

III. Havdallah sung by Cesare Tagliacozzo, Rome, 1954. Benedictions and verses of messianic hope recited to signal the end of Shabbat and the beginning of the new week, in the Italian tradition of Rome.

IV. Chad Gadya sung by Fernando Procaccia, Genova, 1954. Many Italian-Jewish chants feature a strong regional component in their use of dialect and in the pronunciation of Italian and Hebrew words that reflect the local accents. In this Florentine version of the famous cumulative song of springtime, Chad Gadya ("one young goat"), each verse of the original Aramaic narration is followed by a translation to a Hebrew/Italian mix.

V. Kol Biru'ei sung by Paolo Nissim, Trieste, 1956. An acrostic poem describing "all the creatures" while singing and praising the unity of god. It is recited daily in the morning prayer in the Italian tradition. This melody is sung only during Rosh Hashanah in the Italian tradition of Padua.

*Text adapted from notes by Francesco Spagnolo.

All recordings used with permission from Dr. Edwin Seroussi and the Jewish Music Research Centre at The Hebrew University of Jerusalem.

KRISZTINA SZABÓ

MEZZO-SOPRANO

Canadian mezzo-soprano Krisztina Szabó is highly sought in both North America and Europe as an artist of supreme musicianship and stagecraft. Among her many laudatory reviews, the Chicago Tribune wrote “Krisztina Szabó stole every scene with her powerful, mahogany voice...” when describing her performances of Ottavia in L’incoronazione di Poppea. The New York Times praised her Lincoln Center debut as Dorabella in Così fan tutte as «clear, strong, stately and endearingly vulnerable...”.

Ms. Szabó is a versatile singer, bridging the worlds of opera, orchestral and recital music ranging in repertoire from the baroque to the contemporary. While the start of her 2020-2021 season includes the world premiere of Yotam Haber’s Estro Poetico-armonico III, by May 2021 she returns to Tafelmusik in an all-Vivaldi concert. In the 2019-20 season, Ms. Szabó sang Gertrude in Hänsel und Gretel with the Canadian Opera Company and appeared as a soloist in Mozart’s Requiem with Vancouver Symphony Orchestra, Handel’s Messiah with Early Music Vancouver and Portland Baroque Orchestra, Beethoven’s Mass in C Major with Kansas City Symphony and Wagner’s Wesendonck Lieder with the Toronto Symphony Orchestra Chamber Soloists.

In 2019, Ms. Szabó sang the world premiere of Ian Cusson’s Where There’s a Wall at the National Arts Centre (Ottawa) and the world

premiere of Barbara Croall’s oratorio Miziwe... (Everywhere...) with Pax Christi Chorale. KEIKO DEVAUX

LAUREATE - 2020 AZRIELI COMMISSION FOR CANADIAN MUSIC

Montreal-based composer Keiko Devaux (b.1982) has had works performed in Canada, France, Germany and Italy by various ensembles including Le Nouvel Ensemble Moderne, musica assoluta, Ensemble Arkea, Quartetto Prometeo and Ensemble Wapiti, among others. She composes regularly for diverse ensembles, as well as collaborates with choreographers and filmmakers.

Her approach embraces a love of electroacoustic sounds and methodology by manipulating and distorting acoustic sound with digital tools, and then transcribing or re-translating these back into musical notation and the acoustic realm. Her interests include emotional experience and affect, auto-organizational phenomena in nature and living beings, as well as 'genre-blurring' by layering and juxtaposing contrasting melodic/harmonic skeletal elements of highly contrasting sonic sources. The distortion of the temporal, frequency and timbral attributes allow the blurring between traditional tonal sounds and more electroacoustic inspired 'noise' gestures.

Ms. Devaux has received numerous prizes and awards, including the Prix Jan V. Matejcek for New Classical Music (2019), the Rotary Club Siena Award (2018), the OUM composition prize (2016 and 2018) and the Jury and Public prizes of the Accès Arkea competition (2017). Her composition Ebb premiered by the Nouvel Ensemble Moderne was nominated in the New Work category of the 2017-18 Opus awards, and her work Ombra was a finalist for the Prix du CALQ – Œuvres de la relève à Montréal in the same year. In 2019 she won the inaugural Azrieli Commission for Canadian Music.

From 2016 to 2018, Ms. Devaux was the composer in residence with Le Nouvel Ensemble Moderne. From 2020 to 2022, she is in residence with the National Arts Centre Orchestra (Ottawa) as a Carrefour composer. She is an Associate Composer with the Canadian Music Centre, president of the board of directors of Codes d'accès, and past organizer of the Montreal Contemporary Music Lab.

Originally from British Columbia, Ms. Devaux began her musical career in piano performance studies as well as composing, touring and recording several albums in independent rock bands. She holds a Bachelor of Music (Écriture) and a Master of Music in instrumental composition from the Université de Montréal. She has also studied with Maestro Salvatore Sciarrino at l'Accademia Musicale Chigiana in Siena, Italy (2017-19). She is currently completing her doctorate in music composition and creation at the Université de Montréal under the direction of Ana Sokolović and Pierre Michaud.

PIERRE MERCURE

The integration of creative media was the axis around which Pierre Mercure's life and work revolved. He studied bassoon and conducting as well as harmony and counterpoint at the Montreal Conservatory of Music (1944-49) with the goal of becoming an orchestra conductor. Here, Claude Champagne helped him discover French music and develop a talent for orchestration, which was evident even in his first works, Kaléidoscope and Pantomime.

Before going to Paris in 1949 for further education, Mercure participated in some modern ballet productions with a group of young poets, musicians, dancers and painters whose artistic views were much influenced by the painter Paul-Émile Borduas. In May 1949, at the Théâtre des Compagnons he realized three works: Dualité, Femme archaïque and Lucrèce Borgia. This collaboration with the 'automatists,' however, had little immediate influence on Mercure's musical language. Its effects were not measurable until 1961, or perhaps even 1965.

Influenced by Borduas' Refus global manifesto (1948), Mercure sought new means of expression. He enrolled in Nadia Boulanger's classes in Paris (1949) and, while increasingly attracted by new music, he preferred to work on improvisations and collective compositions with his composer friends. He left Boulanger's studio before too long to study orchestration with Arthur Hoérée and Darius Milhaud and conducting with Jean Fournet. After a year filled with new experiences, Mercure returned to Montreal, still searching for new means of expression.

Throughout the period 1948-59 Mercure continually searched for new sonorities and lyricism, taking Stravinsky, Milhaud and Honegger as his models. His essentially lyrical nature was revealed in the song cycle Dissidence, where his Divertissement and Triptyque marked a point of artistic arrival. Insistent rhythms and glittering orchestrations can be found in his numerous background scores for CBC radio dramas (1950-54) and for stage productions by Les Compagnons. This association with theatre, dance and even painting was a determining influence on Mercure.

In January 1952, he joined the CBC and became its first producer of TV music programs. He produced 41 programs in the series 'L'Heure du concert' (1954-9) and several 'Concerts pour la jeunesse'. His musical style became more recognizable but also fueled by a need for continual experimentation. Mercure's subsequent explorations in electroacoustics grew out of encounters with the Groupe de recherches musicales (GRM) during his second study trip to Europe (1957-8). A third study trip to Paris, Darmstadt and Dartington during the summer of 1962 allowed him to gain a closer knowledge of electronic music.

At the time of his death in a traffic accident (1966), Mercure had scarcely reached maturity. His musical output had been peaking since 1961 with each new work stepping towards the realization of an ideal of freedom governed by human thought.

Mercure's manuscripts and papers are deposited in the Bibliothèque et Archives nationales du Québec. Volume 35 of Radio Canada International's Anthology of Canadian Music, issued on CD in 1990, is devoted to Mercure's compositions. His status as an Associate Composer is maintained by the Canadian Music Centre.

YITZHAK YEDID

LAUREATE - 2020 AZRIELI PRIZE FOR JEWISH MUSIC

Yitzhak Yedid is an award-winning composer and improvising pianist with a folio of over fifty orchestral, chamber, solo and vocal works. He is currently a 2017 Sidney Myer Creative Fellow and a past recipient of Israel's Prime Minister's Prize for Composers (2007) and the Landau Prize for Performing Arts (2009). Yedid has been a composer-in-residence at the Judith Wright Centre (Brisbane, 2010) and at the Western Australian Academy of Performing Arts (2008). His works have won several international awards, most recent among them the 2020 Azrieli Prize for Jewish Music.

Yedid was born in Israel and since 2007 has called Australia home. He studied piano at the Jerusalem Academy of Music and Dance, continued his schooling at the New England Conservatory and earned a Ph.D. in composition from Monash University. His interests as a composer focus on the integration of non-European musical elements, including improvisation, with Western practice. More specifically, his compositions explore the nexus of classical Arabic music, Arabic-influenced Jewish music and contemporary Western art music.

Inspired by literature, philosophy, art and landscape, Yedid's compositions form narratives told in pictures, textures and colours. His music incorporates a wide spectrum of contemporary and ancient styles to create a unique voice that reflects his Syrian and Iraqi Jewish background. This music exhibits an: "eclectic, multicultural and very personal style that amalgamates ancestral Syrian- and Iraqi-Jewish cantillation, Israeli East-West encounters, European and American avant-garde compositional techniques mixed with free jazz and selected Australian influences, all infused with insights of a concert pianist and improviser to create an experimental, highly expressive yet alluring modern style." While Yedid's music is multiethnic, multicultural, and consequently, transnational in its approach, it is also well integrated and marked by a unique creative unity.

Yitzhak Yedid has performed at New York's Carnegie Hall and Boston's Jordan Hall, as well as with many ensembles in festivals and venues across Europe, Canada, USA, Asia and Africa. Thirteen albums of his music have been released on the Challenge Records International, Sony, Naxos, -btl-, Muse, MCI and Kaleidos labels, and numerous reviews of his work have been published in the international music media.

In addition to his career as a composer and performer, Dr. Yedid has been teaching and mentoring music students since 2008. He currently lectures in composition and piano at the Queensland Conservatorium Griffith University in Brisbane.

In Memoriam

JOSEPH ROULEAU

A message from Sharon Azrieli D.Mus C.Q., on behalf of the Azrieli Foundation:

It is with great fondness that we remember the life of the great singer, visionary and philanthropist
Joseph Rouleau, CC, GOQ, AL.

Joseph was a huge inspiration to me, as he was to so many Canadian singers. He was generous with his time, energy and guidance, especially through his foundational involvement in leading arts institutions like Jeunesses Musicales Canada, the Montreal International Music Competition and so many others.

On this occasion, we remember the central role Joseph played in the creation and launch of the Azrieli Music Prizes as the inaugural Chair of the Advisory Council. Here, we witnessed so much of what made him so special to us all – his charm, collaboration, commitment, intelligence, thoughtfulness and warmth.

Joseph really was a force of nature. While it is still difficult for me to imagine the world without him,
I am grateful for all he did and wholeheartedly dedicate tonight's celebration to his memory.
